The International Studio & Curatorial Program announces the opening of women boxed, an exhibition of work by Ground Floor resident Elaine Byrne in ISCP's Project Space. women boxed is a three-channel video installation that invites dialogue about how women's labor is viewed in society, using the magic trick of sawing a woman in half as a pivotal metaphor.

Byrne observes, "The world of magic has been dominated by men, where the magician actively drives the story and the female assistant functions as a spectacle for the male gaze. The magician's assistant brings the action to a stop and captures the spectators' attention—she freezes the flow of events for moments of erotic contemplation." Evoking ever-present gender inequality, the female assistant plays the role of victim. She is a woman literally encased in a box, seeming to await her fate. In actuality, the female assistant is largely responsible for the success of the trick, but her labor is hardly recognized.

One of Byrne's three videos was recently filmed on location at the Houdini Museum in Scranton, Pennsylvania, where the artist filmed the renowned female magician, Dorothy Dietrich. The first woman to saw a man in half, Dietrich speaks about her role as a female magician in a male-dominated industry. At a time when women continue fighting for many freedoms and equalities all over the world, women boxed alludes to these struggles through the arena of magic and illusion.
